

Class Booking & Prorated Pricing

How a customer books onto a class block, how the price is worked out when they join partway through, and what you see and do on your side as each booking comes in.

1. What this covers

Classes at LG Pilates aren't booked session by session — customers book onto a block, which is a run of weekly classes (e.g. Monday Intermediate, 6 January to 24 February). One booking covers the whole block, and the same booking automatically carries the customer through every week of it — no re-booking each week.

If someone joins after the block has already started, they shouldn't pay for weeks that have already happened. The system works this out automatically and only charges for the sessions remaining.

2. A typical scenario

Sarah sees the Monday Intermediate class on the website. The current block started three weeks ago and has five weeks left to run. She books a place.

- 1 Sarah opens the booking form for that block and fills in her name, email and phone.
- 2 As a new customer, she also completes a short medical (PAR-Q) form.
- 3 The system works out she's joining with 5 sessions left in the block (not the full 8), so she's shown a price for 5 sessions, not 8.
- 4 She pays (by card or bank transfer, depending on how payment is currently set up) and gets a confirmation email.
- 5 Her booking appears on your dashboard immediately, showing the reduced amount she owes.

3. How a customer books — step by step

From the public site, a customer picks a class and clicks either "Book Current Block" or "Book Next Block" (the second only appears once the next block is open and the current one is filling up or ending soon). This opens the booking form.

The public schedule. Each class shows spaces left, the current block's dates, and the price — here the Monday class has only 1 session left in its block, so it's priced at £7 instead of the full £42.

The screenshot shows a web application for booking Pilates blocks. The main heading is "Book your Pilates Block". A modal form titled "Mixed Ability" is open, showing the booking details for "Moravian Church, Baildon — Monday 09:45". The form has four steps: 1. Your details, 2. Medical, 3. Emergency contact, and 4. Payment. The current step is "Your details", which includes fields for "FIRST NAME *", "LAST NAME *", "EMAIL ADDRESS *", and "PHONE NUMBER *". The price for the booking is shown as "£7". The background shows a list of available Pilates blocks with details like time, location, and remaining spots.

Clicking "Book Current Block" opens the form. Step 1 of 4 (2 of 2 for returning customers) is name, email and phone — the price for this booking is shown at the top.

Returning customers (already have a PAR-Q form on file)

Shown a short 2-step form: their details, then payment. No need to redo the medical form.

New customers

Shown a 4-step form: details, personal info, medical (PAR-Q) form, then payment.

NOTE

A class only shows a "Book" button at all if there's a current or next block for it with space. A full block shows "Current Block Full" instead and the button is disabled.

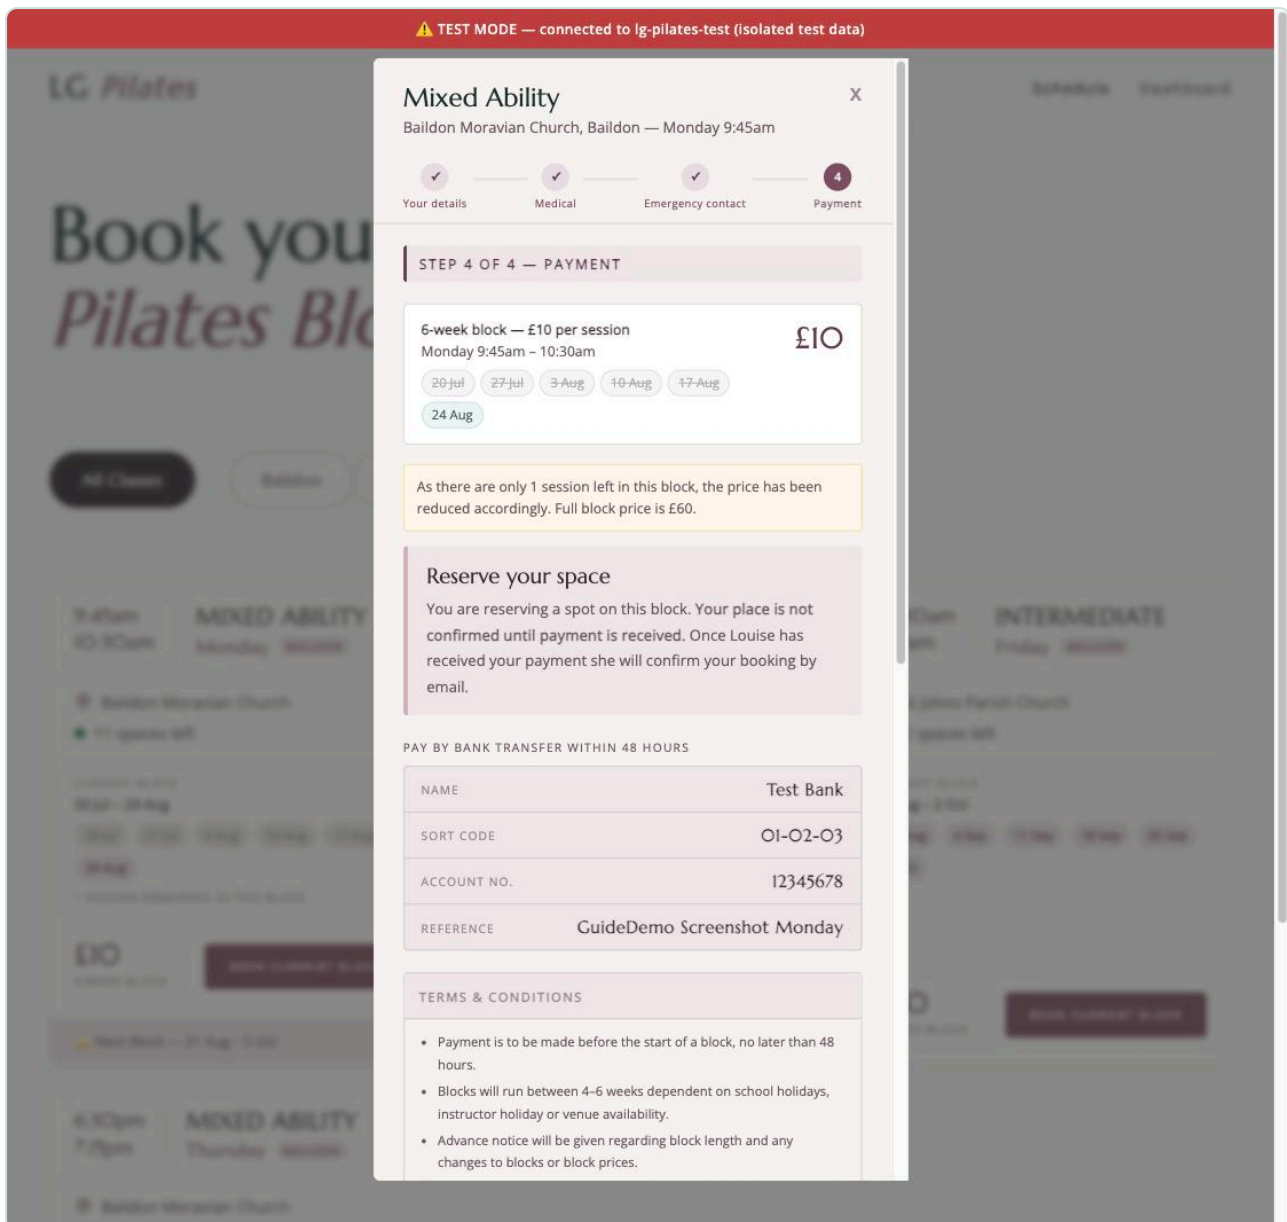

4. How prorated pricing works

Every block has a full price for the whole run, worked out from the price-per-session and the number of weeks. When someone books, the system counts how many of those weekly sessions are still ahead of today's date:

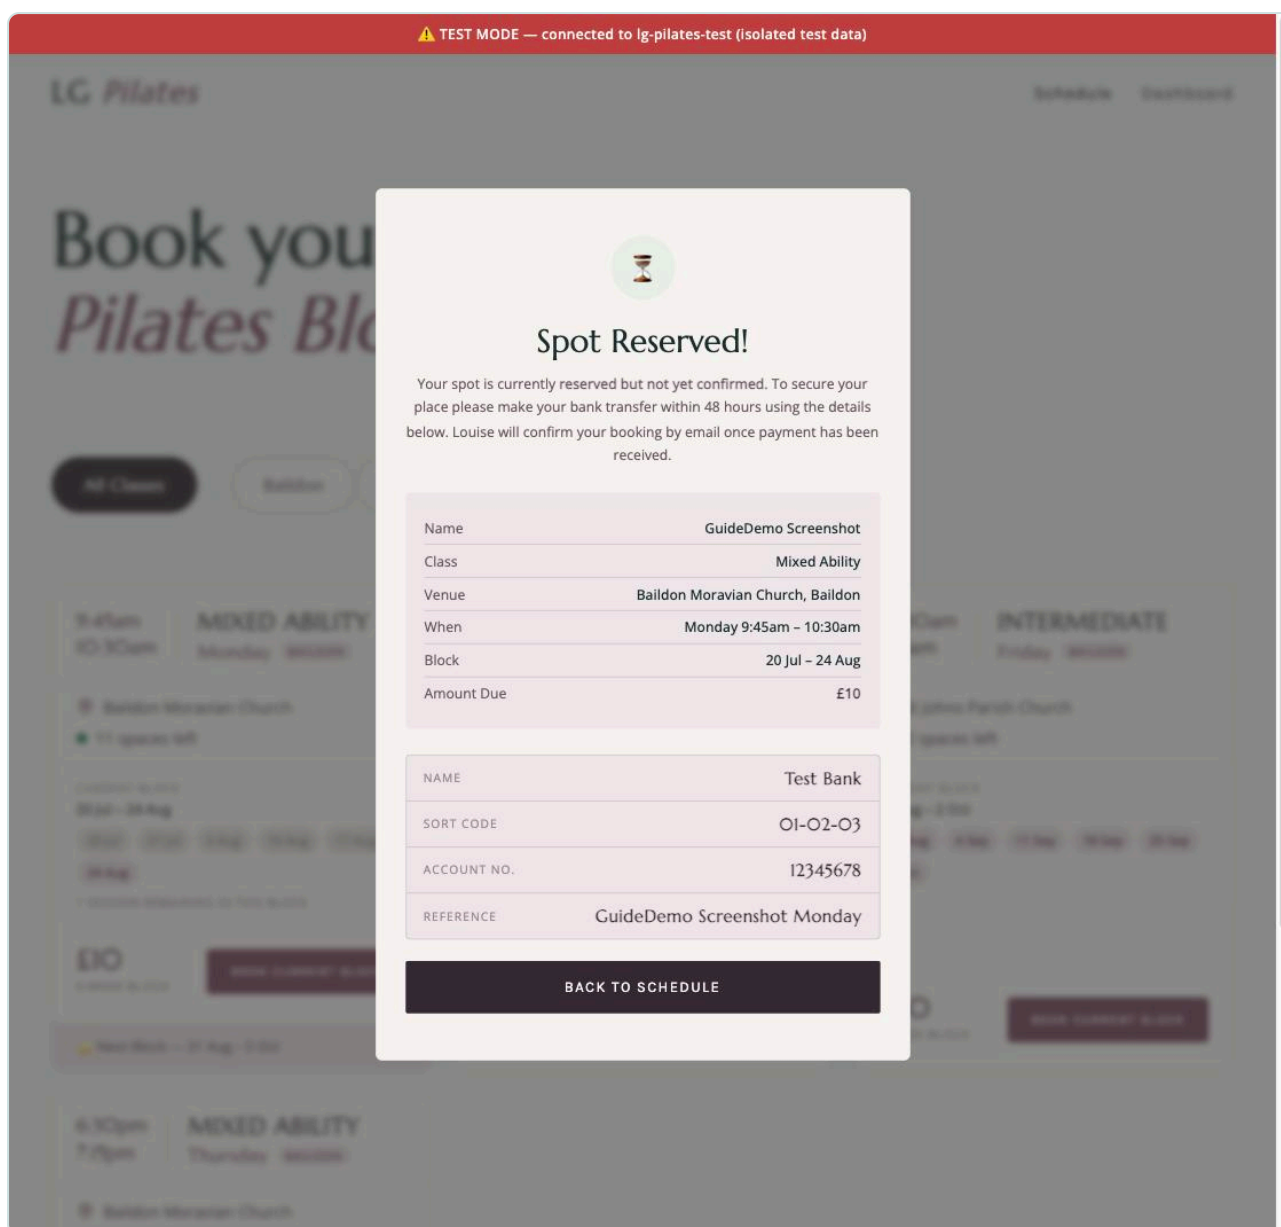

- All sessions still ahead → full price, no discount.
- Some sessions already gone → price for the remaining sessions only.
- The very last session already happened → this shouldn't come up in practice, since a block stops being bookable once it's finished.

NOTE

The price a customer is shown, the price they're charged, and the amount recorded against their booking are always the same figure — worked out once, the same way, wherever it's calculated.

The final step. Past sessions in the block are shown crossed out, the reduced price is explained in plain language, and payment details are shown (bank transfer example here — a card payment step looks different but the pricing logic is identical).

What the customer sees immediately after submitting a bank-transfer booking — their spot is held but not yet confirmed until you've received payment.

5. What you see and do as admin

Every booking lands on All Bookings straight away, showing the customer, class, block and the amount due (already prorated if they joined mid-block).

PAYMENT METHOD	BOOKING STATUS	WHAT YOU NEED TO DO
Card (Stripe)	CONFIRMED automatically	Nothing — payment success confirms the booking itself.

Bank transfer

RESERVED until you act

Once you see the payment land in the bank, click
Confirm on that booking.

A booking's place in the class isn't guaranteed just by starting the form — the space is only actually held once the booking is written to the system, which checks there's still room at that moment.

6. Technical considerations

CAUTION

If a class fills up in the last moment between a customer starting the form and submitting it, the system rejects the booking with a "class full" message rather than double-booking the space. This is intentional and rare, but Louise or customers may occasionally see it.

NOTE FOR FUTURE SESSIONS

Prorated pricing is calculated from the block's actual start date, counted forward week by week — not from the display text under each class ("29 Dec" etc, which has no year attached to it). This was a real bug once (a January joiner was wrongly charged full price because of how a Dec-to-Jan block was read) — fixed in session 67, issue #54. If prices ever look wrong for a block that spans a year-end, this is the first place to check.

NOTE

The price shown to a customer is calculated in their browser, but the amount actually charged and recorded is worked out again independently on the server when the booking is saved — so a customer can't tamper with the price by editing the page before submitting.

7. Quick reference

QUESTION	ANSWER
Does a customer book individual sessions?	No — one booking covers the whole block, every week, automatically.
What if someone joins partway through?	They're only charged for the sessions still to come.
Do I need to do anything for a card payment?	No — it confirms itself once payment succeeds.
Do I need to do anything for a bank transfer?	Yes — click Confirm once you see the money land.
Where do I see new bookings?	All Bookings, top of the dashboard sidebar.
Can a class be overbooked?	No — the system checks space is still available at the moment the booking is saved, not just when the form opens.
